

As a person with a disability. From the onset of my becoming an NDIS recipient, for which I am truly grateful.

NO ONE has ever spoken to my primary carer, in my case my husband, to ensure that he had the skills to handle the long term outlook of providing my care while he works full time. Carers should not be 'assumed to have the skills , patience and strength of character to maintain a long term caring role. No respite was ever suggested, recommended or offered. As the disabled one, I was never given access to any safe place to turn, in moments of overwhelming stress.

I realise the NDIS recipient has an annual review, perhaps a review of the Carer as well could assist in providing further safety and security to the NDIS participant. Just a suggestion.
