

ANONYMOUS 17169 - New submission from Early Years Strategy - Public Submissions

I feel that parents have the biggest responsibility of their children. It would be great to have public resources for parents, to mentally coach them and prepare them for effective parenting. These resources could be available on a government website, at universities, printed material for distribution at community centres and other public spaces, QR codes shared in public places etc. Things that parents could be taught are ensuring that children are given minimum screen time, ensuring they have good diets, what they should be taught at home and how, managing themselves etc.