Why are we consulting on the lists before the Bill has been passed by the Parliament?

- We have heard concerns raised by the community about not having the opportunity to see some of the detail that will be in rules and transitional instruments.
- In particular, the transitional instrument about NDIS Supports which will need to be in place if the Bill commences.
- This transitional instrument will include lists about what NDIS funding can and cannot be spent on.
- We would like to take as much time as possible to hear from the disability community about the lists.

What are the lists?

- We have prepared two lists about what NDIS funding can and cannot be spent on.
- The list about what NDIS funding can be spent on can be found here
- The about what NDIS funding cannot be spent on can be found here

Where did the lists come from?

- They come from current operational guidance and work alongside the National Disability Insurance Scheme (Supports for Participants) Rule 2013 which already describe some of what the NDIS will and will not be responsible for funding.
- The intent is to broadly reflect current practice including some proposed exclusions in relation to items that are not evidence-based or are daily living costs that were never intended to be part of the Scheme.

What is the purpose of the lists?

- The purpose of the lists is to provide clarity for participants, nominees, providers and the disability community when selecting their supports, but it does not change the types of supports that have always been appropriate to purchase with NDIS funding.

- The overarching test will remain whether:
 - a person has a need for the support as a result of their disability, and
 - whether the support is most appropriately funded by the NDIS.

What is the new definition of NDIS Support in the Bill?

- The proposed amendments to Section 10 of the NDIS Act enable the creation of new rules about what is and is not an NDIS support.

Why do we need a definition of NDIS Support?

- The NDIS Review heard consistently, particularly from participants, that it is not always clear what they can spend their funding on.
- Currently this is in rules and operational guidance which is difficult to access.
- The NDIS Review recommended providing more clarity to participants about what is and is not funded under the NDIS.
- Making it clear about what the NDIS does and does not fund will help participants make more informed choices.
- This will support the development of the new budget-setting framework recommended by the NDIS Review to enable more flexible use of funding.
- A future rule will be developed with governments and people with disability and must be agreed by all states and territories.

What is a transitional rule and why do we need it?

- The new rules will take time to develop, together with the disability community and must be agreed by states and territories.
- Until these rules are developed, there will be a transitional approach to defining what is and is not an NDIS support.
- These lists will be incorporated in a transitional rule based on current arrangements around what NDIS funding can be spent on.
- This transitional rule will stay in place until the Commonwealth, States and Territories agree on a rule to replace it.

What do we need from you?

We want your feedback on the lists to help us understand if we have got them right, or what we might need to change.

To provide feedback please answer the questions below by:
